

OUR BRISBANE LETTER

APRIL 27.
I now well into the work of the session, and the Ministerial programme in our hands. Now during the two days upon which the Legislative Assembly has sat, we have been favoured with the use of the hand of the Opposition. Putting the two together, I should say the game will not be an exciting one, and that it will not be particularly to the minds of young men there has of late been a feeling of "Bury My Days in the House."

of time at the end of the present year, but the natural course of events it would do, but by some means or other, which were never agreed, but in which the Ministry were supposed to concur, a dissolution was to be brought about in a couple of months—so soon, in fact, as the votes were passed. From the materials now at our disposal, there is nothing to warrant a verdict. The political atmosphere looks, though it may be the serenity of treachery.

Mr. Palmer, as had been predicted at the meeting of the House, took his seat on the back benches, and at the first opportunity formally renounced his leadership of the opposition, and stated that Mr. M'Ilwain had been selected by that party to succeed him. The speaker and other members were very careful in alluding to the earliest passages of their speeches at this occasion reference to this subject, speaking of the hon. member for Port Curtis's good sense, and expressing the usual congratulations and hopes with regard to the new leader. I may add

Mr. Palmer, before the evening sitting terminated, said that if he abdicated command, he had no intention of laying down his weapons and accepting the impression he took pains to convey was the impression he meant to do more fighting in the ranks, if called, than before.

The fifth session of the seventh Parliament was opened with modest pomp and circumstance, on Tuesday noon, by the Governor in person. There was no barest ceremony, and the barest interest attached to it by outsiders. The address, in reply, was delivered by Mr. De Burgh Perce, the new member for the County of Wick.

These speeches were of the customary character, flavored, however, with certain notes of personal independence promiscuously dropped over the whole. After the second day there was a long pause, and Mr. Speaker was on the point of putting the question, when Mr. Palmer arose, made his abdication, and unobtrusively attacked the Government policy. His agency's speech had made mention of the out that, though for four months we had been fighting on the verge of war, nothing but talk, talk, talk, had come from Queensland. There was not enough money for the salute; the guns were tin-tin-tin; the Volunteer movement had received so little from the Government that they could only muster 700, that instead of 3000 men, and so on. The Easter holidays there had been no considerable encampments, at Sandgate, which was a considerable criticism. It was the first of the year and a great deal was not to be expected of it. But the Government were not to be deterred.

the ranks at times at Sandgate was not of the to raise a flame of admiration in the heart of a selfish beholder. The Queensland Volunteers have deal to learn, and Mr. Palmer had a perfect and other hon. members following a perfect sustained and funny about the picnic in tents on practical heights, which were most unsuitable for practical movements.

the country upon the disappearance of the and consequent distress, and argued that the at enormous self-sacrifice in order to Mr. Milwraith, took the special graph by paragraph. The Railway policy Government he described as a muddle he brought forward figures and deduc-to show that the Maryborough and Gympie way will cost the country little less than £10,000, instead of £2500, as it and all similar public might, under proper management, be made to He complained that upon the Polynesian on, the Customs, Navigation, and Polynesian had been strained to harness and worry the agricultural industry—a line of argument that, because the debate was closed, was powerfully reinforced by Mr. Beer, who is the representative of the great Mackay sugar interests, and a Ministerial member as a rule. Mr. McIlwraith sounded another note also upon the redistribution question. He criticised the single electorate system as the source of the vexation and demoralisation which I venture to think a fortnight ago in your columns to spell is in the words of four letters—lost. It was a little amusing to see, in the remarks of member after member who part in the subsequent stages of the debate, a determined rebellion against their home constituents. The hon. members who have especially pertinacious in their applications for something to be done were foremost in their co-operation for the colonists who measure a member by the vote he gets for his district. The Electoral Bill will be brought forward till next Tuesday, but I am sure that it will only propose a modification of the present system. It was evident that this, standing to be the question of the session, and that the representatives, as a whole, regard it with most

The Dating Downs members, approved the congratulatory paragraph to which Mr. Deffered, gave a melancholy picture of the condition of the country, or perhaps it would be more correct to say some portions of their own district. According to them, unless there be more rain, and more speedily, affairs will be almost as bad as they were a few months ago. On the other hand, Mr. Deffered, who represents an agricultural district, between the hills and the foot-hills, denied that there was lack of grass or water; and the evidence for that point, in the end, was pretty evenly balanced. Mr. Deffered, however, was not in a position to give any definite answer to the question, whether the country was better off than it was a few months ago.

only member of the house who by virtue of office has claimed the right to be "Honorable," made a big speech, in which he said that the District Court habits asserting themselves was a long time before his hearers could make up their minds whether he was a friend or otherwise of the country, though his part of the Opposition seemed to indicate that he was the latter. At the most points (and the hon. member left no stone unturned) Mr. Pringle's utterances were in accordance with the position of independence he claimed for himself. The debate was a very successful one.

two nights. We of the outer world had been here before that there was to be an adverse vote, but the ex-leader of the Opposition opposed his successor to attempt it, and it was not. On Thursday evening, therefore, the subject had been thrashed out, and the address in reply was delivered without a division, the House adjourned till Tuesday. The campaign duly opened, and no bones broken. The only y is it that the cleverest man who falls into our gratefully adopts evil ways, generally with remarkable address. anner in which elaborate schemes of fraud and fall so often by obvious simplicity seems to not a fatality against wrong doing. Some time ago it was known in Brisbane that one of the had been robbed of a sum of money in notes.
Details were kept secret, and all the efforts of lives failed. The mystery has now unfolded in The notes were stolen by a young gentleman ried in the bank, and I believe there was a plicity, also in the banking profession. The of the lost escaping detection, and apparently was discovered in his opening an account another Brisbane bank. The numbers of the notes were not known; there was no trace; yet he thus deliberately into the lion's mouth. The man was well known, and his salary also. Naturally, suspicions were now aroused, and then it was remembered that he had been living extravagantly in Brisbane and Sydney. He was arrested, and seized that £600 worth of notes were "planted" in a river bank, in the Botanical Gardens, and there, under the treasure was found, leaving £400 still accounted for. The case has not yet come before the Police Courts, an adjournment being obtained to give time for the arrival of accomplices from Sydney. The young man is a respectable commercial in Brisbane, and is a very painful case.

MARCH 12.

Vladimir has several times sent the advice to Vienna, that Austria should occupy Bosnia and Herzegovina, in order to be then able better to defend her interests. A large party at the Austrian Court inclines for this policy; as yet Count Andrássy has not dared to take this step, as the home differences and difficulties and the wishes of the various nationalities hindered him from following any stronger policy. The preparations for a mobilisation of the Austrian army have been made. From the negotiations in the Congress will depend whether the mobilisation can be perfected. Count Andrássy is certainly not inclined simply to give his consent to the Russian-Turkish treaty of peace, but wants on the contrary to see this treaty discussed in all its points, and eventually altered. If Russia opposes this latter demand of Austria, then the breaking out of hostilities is again likely. Public opinion in Germany inclines more towards Austria than towards Russia. Prince Bismarck will have to take notice of this fact, and will have to make it felt accordingly, shall we say, to her spare Austria much of England. It is to be hoped that the Chancellor's skill and good luck will stick to him in this difficult task. It has helped him in many difficult moments already, and may again help him now, when it is the question of preserving peace for all Europe.

France is most zealously busy at work for the opening of the Exhibition on the 1st of May, and in this circumstance lies another slight guarantee for the maintenance of peace. In the last hour a compact has been made between Lord Granville and the Emperor in the international competition. The Emperor has, in consequence of several hints on the part of the French Government, allowed that the German artists may send some of their works to the Exhibition, and has granted that for this purpose the necessary means should be drawn from the Imperial resources. The French Government have on their part done all in their power to facilitate the participation, and have reserved almost the best places for the German artists. This is a new and very happy sign, that the two neighbouring peoples want to put the old quarrel and want only one wreath with each other on peaceful ground. The invitation to the German artists has indeed come so late that it is not possible to execute now and striking paintings. The best works of the last years will therefore be chosen and sent to Paris, and our galleries, as well as private proprietors, have most willingly consented to give their property away for the time of the Exhibition. Thus Germany will be represented at least in one branch most worthily. Germany may indeed look with satisfaction to the result, and to the declaration of the Emperor, who has declared himself satisfied that the German Empire should only be represented by one Minister who was himself. For some time, affairs went on quite smoothly. Great questions had to be discussed which were very necessary for the perfection of the German Empire. Sovereigns and people had to give in to necessity, and the Chancellor found with neither of the two any serious resistance to his wishes; but in the course of years it became more and more visible that the Minister for Germany had not the proper influence in relation to the German Parliament was not provided with parliamentary rights, and that for the maintenance of the great army the necessary means were not ready. Prince Bismarck has for a long time worked on the solution of the problem to create the necessary and proper help on these three points. His first endeavours were to find for himself a representative who might take from him some of the weight of work which was resting upon his shoulders. This wish was of course perfectly justified by the ill-health of a Vice-Chancellor and by the fact that the Federal Governments, but the Chancellor, well as the Liberal majority of the Parliament, would have liked to see that at this opportunity responsible Ministers of the Empire should have been created who would have given to the Government of the Empire the necessary stability, unity, and solidity. But this plan the smaller States, and particularly Bavaria and Wurtemberg, have most decidedly opposed, and the Chancellor, as well as the Liberal majority, were forced to give in and to be satisfied with the concession of a Vice-Chancellor to relieve him of the weight of their interest endangered by a strong Liberal Government; and the Ultramontanes, to whom the existence of a Protestant Empire is altogether hateful, took good care to profit by the opportunity to work discord. Likewise the Parliament must at present renounce the hope of receiving the full power to exercise the constitutional control over the finances. Such full power appears as a violation of the rights of each single State, and is therefore decisively repudiated by them. The Parliaments, which are continually asked to grant new laws, will be submitting to the creation of constitutional rights opposed, and thus new conflicts rise continually, which constantly call up discord between Parliament and Government. The Chancellor asks for the Empire new taxes, in order to maintain the army, &c., and the Parliament will only grant them if they find their rights no longer despised, and in this way the questions turn continually in a circle. The Prussian Diet watsn just as carefully over the maintenance of their constitutional rights, and this gives rise to new difficulties, for the Prussian Government is not without a Chancellor. In order to overcome all this, Prince Bismarck finds himself at one moment in a struggle with the Emperor, at another moment he wrestles with the separate Governments, at a third he has to combat the Parliament. This is doubly to be pitied, as these struggles are often carried on in the most bitter manner, and generally leave on both sides a feeling of enmity. The nearest victims for the Chancellor are of course his colleagues of the Prussian Ministry or his high officials which surround him, and these are therefore in constant service. Ambassadors and Ministers have preferred to remain distant from business transactions rather than be exposed further to such disagreeable frictions. Last year Delbruck, who was looked upon as one of the friends
